Paul Bulkeley, Head Architect

Paul is the founding director of Snug Architects, an award-winning practice that was selected in 2017 by the Royal Institute of British Architects as one of only nine role model practices. He has over 22 years of experience in Architecture and Urban Design, with an established reputation for award winning design, visionary thinking and the ability to deliver engaging community facilitation that engenders consensus. He is a visionary with an exceptional ability to see solutions where others might see challenges. He is a gifted communicator and recognised in the industry, having spoken internationally on design and business ethics. He is also a Teaching Fellow at the University of Southampton where he pioneered a civil engineering and architecture degree.

Paul is a committed Christian and has been developing a Biblical approach to 'business as ministry' . On the 500th anniversary of the Reformation he founded BizMin, an international organisation dedicated to equipping Christian entrepreneurs around the world to do business as ministry. He lives in Lymington with his wife and four children but grew up on the banks of the river Congo.
